BOSTON NEW YORK CHICAGO LONDON

A Handbook of Greek Archaeology

By HAROLD N. FOWLER, Ph.D., Professor of Greek, Western Reserve University, and JAMES R. WHEELER, Ph.D., Professor of Greek Archaeology and Art, Columbia University.

$2.00

AN introductory chapter gives a brief survey of the history of Greek archaeology in order that the reader may appreciate the steps by which our present stage of knowledge has been reached. The succeeding chapters treat of Prehellenic Greece, sculpture, architecture, vases, paintings, terra cottas, metal work, and coins; accompanied by a complete index. The chapter on architecture contains numerous observations on technical points of stone construction, which have not elsewhere been published so conveniently and clearly. The illustrations present clearly the typical features of the art of different epochs. In their selection the authors have gone as much as possible to the museums of this country, and a number of objects are here reproduced for the first time.

A Handbook of Greek Religion

By ARTHUR FAIRBANKS, Ph.D., Director of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston.

$1.50

THIS Handbook treats the subject under three headings: Part I, Forms of worship and belief; Part II, Historical sketch of Greek religion; and Part III, The relation of religion in Greece to other phases of social development. A simple, comprehensive study of the facts in regard to Greek religion has long been needed by students of Greek civilization, by students of comparative religion, and by students of early Christianity. In discussing forms of worship, or periods of development, or the relation of religion to ideals of beauty and righteousness and philosophic truth, the aim of the present volume is to state the facts very briefly with due emphasis on their religious significance. The text is provided with seventy-six specially prepared illustrations and plans, and is further supplemented by frequent footnotes and an index.

A History of Greek Sculpture

By RUFUS B. RICHARDSON, formerly Director of the American School of Classical Studies at Athens.

$1.50

THIS work is the fruit of long and uninterrupted study by a distinguished American scholar who has enjoyed an unrivaled opportunity to acquire an immediate knowledge of his subject. It is written, as it were, in the presence of the monuments themselves. For ten years Professor Richardson was Director of the American School of Classical Studies at Athens, and each year lectured to the members of the School on the remains of Greek sculpture in Athens and in other parts of Greece made familiar to him by extensive travel. The author's first-hand acquaintance with the Greek sculpture preserved in the chief museums of Europe has also given his book a quality of freshness and independence of view. The volume aims to combine description with criticism, and contains frequent reference to recent work by expert archaeologists. It is profusely illustrated, and contains photographic reproductions of many Greek sculptures not ordinarily represented in works on the subject.
